

YOUNG ARCHITECT OVERWHELMED; DEPLORES USE OF COMBUSTIBLES

Pittsburg, Dec. 30.—Benjamin H. Marshall, the young Chicago architect who designed the Iroquois Theater, left for his home to-night, taking advantage of the first opportunity to view the scene of horror. Mr. Marshall is likewise the architect of the Nixon Theater in this city. He was overwhelmed by the news of the disaster.

"I'll never allow another theater to be built with a stick of wood in it," he declared, reading bulletins which were handed him.

"The Iroquois was built along the very latest lines and was provided with twenty-seven double fire exits, but wood was used and stairways were employed. A fireproof building will not be erected as long as wood is used. In a theater there are so many articles of inflammable material that when a blaze once gets headway it spreads in the most alarming manner."

"was a thin column of smoke which floated from the stage. This was followed by a sheet of flame which mounted to the ceiling and enveloped the hangings about the front of the stage. The people in the parquet started for the door in an orderly manner.

"The people on the stage, the ushers and a number of spectators arose to their feet and shouted for order and did everything in their power to prevent a panic.

"Then somebody screamed and everybody apparently lost all control of themselves, and ran for the doors. I was knocked down twice by men who seemed to have lost their minds. Men sprang to the stairs apparently regardless of the women and children who were going down at the time. Many women and children were knocked down in this way who had been saved had they not been pushed to one side by men who thought of nothing but themselves."

CATHORNE THINKS FIRE WAS CAUSED BY CALCIUM.

Herbert Cathorne, a member of the cast, assisted many of the chorus girls from the stage exits in the panic. After being driven from the building, he made two attempts to enter his dressing-room, but both times was driven back by the firemen, who feared he would be overcome by smoke. Mr. Cathorne said:

"I was in a position to see the origin of the fire and I feel positive that it was an electric calcium light that started the blaze. The calcium lights were being used to illuminate the stage in the latter part of the second act when the song 'In the Pale Moonlight' is being sung.

"I was standing behind a wing on the left side of the stage when my attention was attracted by a peculiar sputtering of one of the calciums.

Above the stage, perhaps twelve feet higher than the top of the curtain, exposed to the audience, was a swinging platform, from which twelve calciums were operated. It appeared to me that one of the calciums had flared up and the sparks ignited the lint on the curtain.

"Instantly, I turned my attention toward the stage and I saw that the song was being carried out and that many of the actors and actresses had not yet discovered the blaze.

SAYS STAGE FIREMEN MIGHT HAVE AVERTED HOLOCAUST.

"Just then the fireman, who is kept behind the scenes rushed up with some kind of a patent fire-extinguisher. Instead of the stream from the apparatus striking the flames, it went almost in the opposite direction.

"Up to this time the flames had not been in sight of the audience. While the stage fireman was working in an endeavor to use the chemical, the flames suddenly swept down and out.

"Eddie Foy shouted something about the asbestos curtain and the fireman attempted to use it and the stage hands ran to his assistance. The asbestos curtain refused to work and then the stage hands and players began to hurry from the theater.

"In my opinion the stage fireman might have averted the whole affair if he had not become so excited. The chorus girls and everybody else, to my mind, was less excited than he.

"There were at least 500 persons behind the scenes when the fire started. I assisted many of the chorus girls from the theater, and some of them were only partially attired. Two of the young women in particular were naked from the waist up. They had absolutely no time to throw a stitch of clothing over their shoulders."

About a score of people in the second balcony were saved by firemen, who took them through the roof and carried them down ladders in the rear of the building.

Two bodies tightly locked in each other's arms, young ladies apparently about 25 years of age, were found in one end of the orchestra pit. They must have fallen there from the balcony above.

The body of a dark-haired girl, apparently 12 years old, was found impaled on the iron railing of the first balcony, she evidently having been thrown over from the second balcony above.

DEAD BABE NUD BUT FOR ITS TINY SHOES.

With all of its clothing torn from it but a pair of baby shoes, the body of a child about 1 year old was found in a far corner of the second balcony. It had evidently been knocked from its mother's arms and was trampled beyond all recognition.

William A. Brady, the well-known New York theatrical manager, and who was in the audience at the time the fire started, said to-night:

"I had just got in from New York and reached the theater not more than fifteen minutes before the fire broke out. It was one of the largest audiences that I ever saw and I was unable to secure a seat. I was standing near the door.

"Looking up, I saw the calcium light apparatus was out of order. Some one came on the stage and assured the audience that there was no danger and for them to keep their seats. Then a ballet dancer came on and performed, but in another second the whole balcony seemed to be in flames. Every one downstairs rushed for the doors, and as far as I know, no one in that part of the house was killed. It was upstairs, where the smoke was blown by the strong draft that came in through the skylights, where death was

DEALT OUT TO HUNDREDS BEFORE THEY REALIZED WHAT HAD HAPPENED.

BRADY COMPARES SCENE TO DANTE'S 'INFERNO.'

"Such a panic as followed the first cry of 'Fire' I have never seen in all my life. The stairways and exits became jammed with fighting humanity in a moment, and the shrieks and moans of the poor people cut off from all escape were the most awful imaginable. It can only be likened to Dante's 'Inferno.'

"With two companions I tried to reach the balcony, but we were driven back by the suffocating smoke and were unable to accomplish anything until the firemen had extinguished the flames. Hundreds joined the rescuers and from one of the entrances to the balcony were removed 150 bodies by actual count. They were jammed and twisted together in all shapes.

"Many of the women and children had been stripped almost naked in their mad efforts to escape from that living tomb. If the audience had not become panic-stricken, I'm sure not more than half a hundred persons would have been killed or injured, as all the bodies I helped to remove from the place were those of persons who had been killed in the terrible jam."

THIEVES WITH BASKETS COLLECTED VALUABLES.

While scores of men were busy in carrying out the dead and injured others, fortunately few in number, searched the aisles and seats for valuables. Two men were found who had provided themselves with baskets, and were filling them with the property of the dead. They were immediately placed under arrest, and the theater ushers and stage hands were given the work of collecting all the valuables on the floor of the theater.

During the evening the police arrested a dozen men accused of being thieves and pickpockets.

The count of the dead was practically complete at midnight, but it was not as yet accurate, and the exact number will not be known before some time to-morrow.

Despite the utmost care, great confusion marked the removal of the bodies. In their haste the police transported bodies to undertaking rooms, and in many instances forgot to report the fact to the station. This is evidenced by the fact that in five different undertaking establishments bodies were received, of which the police had no record whatever.

Allowing for these discrepancies, the lists made up by the police and the newspapers practically agree. The newspapers claim 562 dead; the police 558.

CORONER SAYS RAILING PREVENTED MANY ESCAPES.

Coroner Treagar made as complete an inspection of the theater as is possible in the condition in which it is to-night. He said:

"If the asbestos curtain had been working I believe that the fire might have been prevented from spreading into the audience chamber. An iron railing which separated each row of seats from the adjoining row prevented, I think, many from reaching places of safety. This circumstance, combined with the steep incline, made it difficult for so large a crowd to escape without great delay.

"Now, this," said the Coroner, "is a modern fire-proof theater, furnished with all the appliances and equipment that are supposed to prevent just such a catastrophe as now has occurred. The plush on the seats of the first balcony was charred, but still visible. This does not look to me as though everybody would have gotten out of the theater alive, when you take into account the speed with which the flames had spread.

"My inspection showed that the seats on the main floor were burned but little. The balconies had evidently shielded to a large extent the seats in the parquet. The path of the flames was evident.

"The stage and ceiling of the theater were blistered and blackened, but there was practically no damage to the furniture on the first floor. The furnishings on the first balcony were entirely destroyed by fire, while those on the first floor were burned only in spots, evidently by burning fragments from above.

RECORDS SHOW ALL LAWS COMPLIED WITH.

The Iroquois Theater was completed less than two months ago at a cost of half a million dollars, and was the finest playhouse in Chicago. It was opened to the public on the night of November 23 with "Mr. Bluebeard."

The records of the City Building Department show that the theater was complete in every detail and that it was absolutely fireproof, all requirements of the law having been complied with.

W. A. Merriman, Western manager of the George H. Fuller Company, the concern which erected the Iroquois Theater, when seen to-night, made the following statement concerning the construction of the building.

"The Iroquois Theater was built with safety as the first consideration. All the building ordinances were adhered to in every detail, and, more than that, there were additional safeguards thrown about until I do not hesitate to state that there was no theater building in the country which was freer from danger. The exits were numerous, and all work that this company performed was absolutely fireproof. After making a very careful examination of the building since the fire, I find that the structure as erected still stands intact."
